

AIRPORT SERVICE QUALITY

BENCHMARKING THE GLOBAL AIRPORT INDUSTRY

Best Practice Report

Parking Facilities

Introduction

Airport Service Quality (ASQ) is a comprehensive ACI initiative to help airports in their continuing efforts to improve the quality of service experienced by passengers.

The Best Practice Reports are an additional service offered as part of the ASQ Survey and are part of the programme's commitment to identifying and disseminating best practices from top-performing airports around the world.

The topic of this Best Practice Report is airport parking facilities. Since most information regarding parking options is available on airport websites, the report was based on internet research instead of the usual online survey.

The research focused on the rates, locations and number of spaces at the four main types of airport car parks.

- ➔ Short-term parking near the terminal
- ➔ Long-term parking near the terminal
- ➔ Off-site long-term parking
- ➔ High-end parking

Parking segmentation

This section provides a detailed picture of the parking options offered by airports.

Car parks can be split into four categories, depending on their location, the duration of the stay and whether or not additional services are offered:

- ➔ Terminal short-term
Car park is within walking distance of the terminal and intended for short stays.
- ➔ Terminal long-term
Parking lot is located near the terminal and meant for longer stays.
- ➔ Off-site long-term
Long-term car park is located off-site and only accessible by shuttle bus. This is usually the cheapest option.
- ➔ High-end
Recently, airports have begun offering additional services (besides Valet parking) to increase revenues and attract more passengers into their car parks. Additional services include dedicated spaces closest to the terminal and parking reservation systems for which business passengers are generally willing to pay a premium.

The parking mix depends on the passenger profile, airport size, available space, alternate means of transportation to go to the airport (public transport), connection rate and airport's commercial strategy. The aim is to find the mix which generates the most revenues and meets passengers' needs and budgets.

Parking options offered

All airports have a car park near the terminal. At most airports (89%) passengers can also park close to the terminal for a longer stay and half of them offer an off-site parking option as well. High-end parking services on the other hand remain limited to a few airports (34%).

Terminal short-term parking

In order to compare the average daily rate for parking at different airports, all prices were converted into US dollars. Prices vary widely, ranging from USD 2.60 to nearly USD 75 per day. On average, passengers pay USD 21.95 to park for one day at the car park closest to the terminal.

European and Middle Eastern airports, especially in the United Arab Emirates, charge far above the global average (+47% and +29% respectively). Several factors contribute to the higher rates in these regions:

- ➔ High cost of living
- ➔ Lack of space near the terminal
- ➔ Governmental policies to promote the use of public transport use

At the other end of the spectrum, the cheapest short-term car parks tend to be located in smaller airports which only have one car park, or where there is a strong driving culture and public transport is limited.

Terminal long-term parking

The average weekly rate for long-term parking at the terminal was calculated from all airports offering this parking option. Long-term parking rates are most expensive at large European hubs such as CDG, MUC, ORY, ARN, FRA and MAD. Interestingly, two North American airports (SAN, BOS) are ranked in the top 10 in terms of long-term parking rates. Similarly to short-term parking, expensive long-term parking fees are the results of:

- ➔ Long-term parking located in the same facilities as short-term because of insufficient space near the terminal (generally no discount for long stays).
- ➔ Extensive public transport alternatives.
- ➔ Where off-site parking with cheaper fees is also available, airports apply a high parking rate in the long-term car park at the terminal to maximise their revenues.

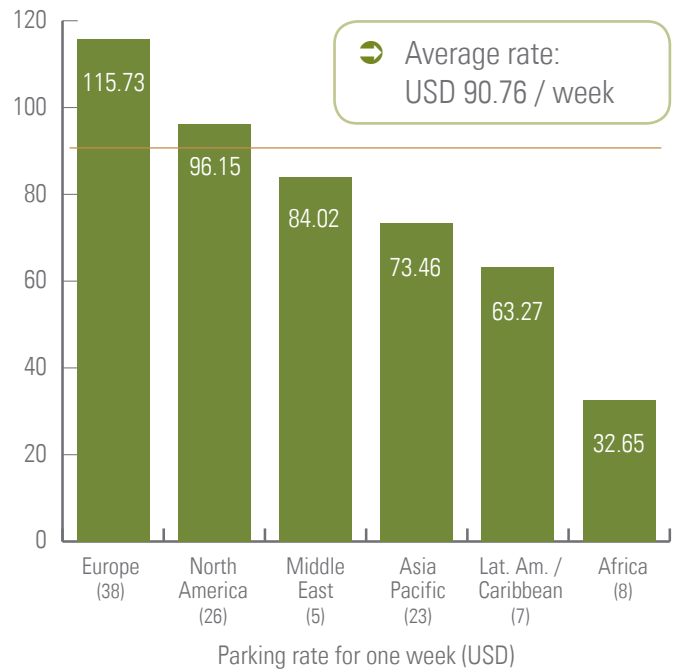

The cheapest airports are those which do not offer an off-site long-term parking option and have a high proportion of leisure passengers, like GRJ, MBA, PDL, POS or BDA.

Regional differences exist but are less marked than for the short-term parking. Europe remains the most expensive region, charging nearly 28% more than the worldwide average of USD 90.76 per week.

Regional parking rate average

Whereas North America is below average for short-term parking, the region's long-term rates are above the global average. An explanation may be that most North American airports do not distinguish short and long-term parking in the lots near the terminal, and provide off-site car parks as an alternative.

Terminal car park pricing strategy

Nearly all airports (89%) offer long-term parking options near the terminal. In 43% of cases, long and short-term parking are separated, either in different car parks or on dedicated floors.

Where is the long-term parking?

- Short and long-term parking in the same facilities
- Long-term parking in dedicated facilities

Short vs. long-term daily rate in the same facilities

- Same daily rate
- Decreasing daily rate
- Increasing daily rate

When the short and long-term car parks are located in the same facilities, airports can adopt different pricing strategies:

- ➔ Same daily rate for short and long-term parking. This strategy is generally used by airports with cheap parking fees (less than USD 10 per day), such as BKK, CAN, FNC, GRJ or MCT.

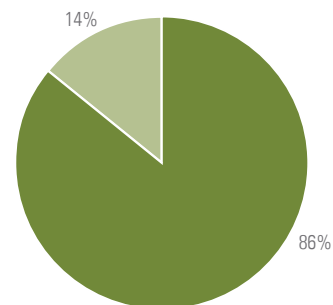

Certain airports with higher rates also adopt this pricing strategy. These tend to be airports which want to generate as much as revenue as possible in the terminal car parks and offer a cheaper off-site option for those with limited budget (ARN, BOS, DFW, IAH, ORY).

- ➔ The longer the stay, the cheaper the daily rate. Two categories can be seen: airports that do not provide off-site parking, and airports that offer off-site lots but prefer to attract the long-term parkers into the car parks closest to the terminal as they are more expensive. European airports such as CDG, FRA, HAM, HEL, LIS, MAD, OSL or ZHR belong to this second category.
- ➔ The longer the stay, the higher the daily rate. This is the case in five airports: CPT, ELS, JNB, HGH and SAN. CPT and ELS only have car parks near the terminal and even if their parking rates increase from the second day they are still fairly low (respectively USD 6.92 and USD 3.46). JNB, HGH and SAN adopt this strategy to promote their off-site car parks.

Is the parking rate fixed or demand-based?

- Fixed rate
- Demand-based rate

Another important aspect of the pricing strategy is the manner in which parking fees are defined. 14% of the airports base their parking charges on demand and give a discount if the parking space has been pre-booked on the internet (minimum stay of 2 or 3 days).

The airports which apply a demand-based pricing strategy are all located in Europe, mainly in the UK, and charge high rates for the car parks closest to the terminal. This strategy is adopted to maximise the usage of the car parks close to the terminal and maximise revenue.

Off-site long-term parking

Half of the airports also provide off-site car parks, only accessible by shuttle bus. The parking rate ranges from USD 21 to USD 193 per week. On average, it costs USD 75.29 to park one week off-site, which is cheaper than to park close to the terminal (USD 90.76).

Just as for terminal car parks, the most expensive airports are located in European capitals where the cost of living is high, or where proximity to the city centre implies a limited number of parking spaces.

Most North American airports are in the second half of the chart. Off-site parking is indeed fairly cheap as these airports usually have a lot of space. Moreover, as the driving culture is still very strong in North America, most passengers tend to drive to the airport.

Off-site long-term parking price benchmark

Off-site vs. terminal long-term parking

Comparing the weekly rates at off-site parking with those applied in the car parks near the terminal reveals that on average, passengers pay 37% less if they choose to park off-site.

Airports giving the highest discount are those with the most expensive car parks near the terminal, like ARN, MUC, LYS, SAN, or OSL.

This further confirms the commercial strategy discussed earlier: airports maximise their parking revenues by maintaining expensive fees in the car parks close to the terminal as they are primarily used by businessmen, while providing cheap off-site parking for leisure passengers with limited budgets.

How much cheaper than the terminal car parks is the off-site parking?

High-end parking

One third (34%) of airports provide a high-end parking option. This type of parking is becoming increasingly popular as airports experience difficult times. To compensate for decreasing passenger numbers, airports must innovate to increase revenues and the usage of their car parks. With rates on average 42% higher than in the regular car parks (without taking membership fees into account), high-end parking provides a way for airports to generate greater revenue.

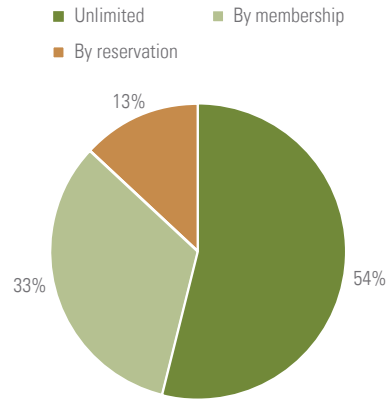

Examples of additional services include:

- ➔ Guaranteed parking space
- ➔ Spaces closest to the terminal
- ➔ Wider spaces
- ➔ Guarded car parks with controlled access
- ➔ Use of transponders to enter / exit the lot quicker
- ➔ More frequent shuttle bus services
- ➔ Pick-up at the passenger's vehicle

A comparison of the services offered by airports reveals three strategies regarding high-end parking use.

- ➔ Unlimited access. The high-end parking lot is open to everybody who is willing to pay a higher rate.

Access to the high-end parking is...

- ➔ By membership. Passengers have to register to be allowed to use the high-end parking and in general they need to pay a membership fee in addition to the parking fees. Certain airports also offer the possibility to rent a fixed parking space.
- ➔ By reservation. Passengers need to pre-book their parking space in the premium car park. A reservation fee is charged on top of the parking fee.

How much more expensive is the high-end parking?

Number of parking spaces available

In order to be able to compare the number of parking spaces offered by airports of different sizes, we have chosen to compare the following ratio: number of parking spaces per million passengers per year.

Number of parking spaces

➔ Average number of spaces: 558 per million passengers

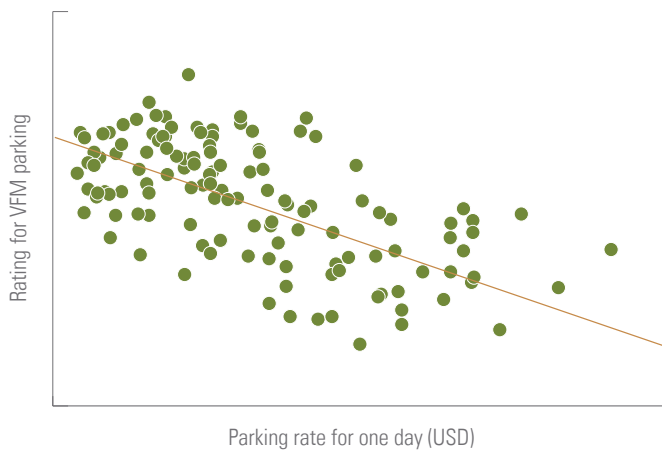

On average, the number of available parking spaces is 558 per million passengers. Several factors can have an impact on this ratio:

- ➔ Size of the airport. The ratio is higher in many smaller airports due to the low number of annual passengers.
- ➔ Amount of space available. The number of parking spaces is higher in airports that have plenty of space to build car parks. This is the case of most North American airports.
- ➔ Connection rate. In airports with a high connection rate, the proportion of passengers using the car parks and the number of spaces are generally lower (HKG for instance).
- ➔ Public transport offering and distance to the city centre. When the airport is easily accessible by public transportation, the proportion of passengers taking their cars and using the car parks decreases.
- ➔ Environmental policy. The government in certain countries limits the construction of parking lots in order to promote public transportation.

Impact on satisfaction

A comparison of parking rates with ASQ Survey satisfaction levels for “value for money of parking” shows that pricing impacts passenger satisfaction: the higher the parking rate, the lower the rating for VFM parking.

Do parking rates have an impact on satisfaction?

However, correlation factor analysis indicates that value for money of parking generally has a relatively low impact on overall passenger satisfaction. For this reason, airports tend to use the car parks as important means to generate revenues.

The trick is to find the pricing strategy which maximises revenue without leading to too much of a decrease in satisfaction levels. Indeed, if passengers become too dissatisfied with value for money of parking, this can cause a decrease in overall satisfaction.
